

Dear Colleagues,

Today on the day of the ISTC 15 anniversary we would like to congratulate you and to wish future successes in developing international contacts in sphere of science and technology.

Our Institute works in close cooperation with the ISTC since its establishment in 1994. One of the first projects that began successfully at that time was a project devoted to explosives detection by neutron-activation methods. Since then we implemented with your support many projects directed at the development of nuclear instrument engineering, as well as to creating technical systems to ensure global security. I would like to thank in particular ISTC management and technical experts for their kind assistance to partners in the process of project preparation and implementation.

We would like to wish to the International Science and Technology Center and to its staff successes in their future activities.
